School now leader in reform

MATH FROM 20

more girls in the program and take them on field trips to events like the USA Science and Engineering Festival," Martin said. Funds are also used for teaching materials and lab resources. When Martin expanded the club from grades 5 and 6 to include third- and fourth-graders, participation jumped from 30 to 70 girls. "Now the older girls are bringing their younger sisters into the club," Martin said. "Research shows it's better to get kids excited about math and science at a younger age." Interested boys may participate in a similar after-school program at Dogwood called BEAMS (Boys Excelling and Achieving in Math and Science). Although Dogwood was permitted to use all $5,000 for its own GEMS program, Martin kept just $1,000 and contributed $1,000 each to four other schools that feed into Langston Hughes Middle School in Reston: Rose Hill, Chesterbrook, McNair and Island Creek elementary schools. "My desire was to help other GEMS clubs thrive within our district. They have been surviving on a shoestring, and I wanted to see other schools benefit," Martin said. "I am very proud of Linda's forward thinking in getting the girls interested in careers they might not otherwise have considered," Cochran said. "She and other teachers are passionate enough to go above and beyond the regular workday to inspire girls." This year, Dominion Virginia Power awarded $142,000 in grants to public schools in Arlington, Fairfax, Fauquier, Loudoun and Prince William counties and to four higher-education institutions in Northern Virginia. "Dominion launched this grant program to encourage creative learning in science and math. We would love more schools to apply for the grants in the future," said Le-Ha Anderson, a spokeswoman for Dominion. Applications for the 2012-13 school year are due May 1. lakea@washpost.com
